ABOUT ME

A Lifelong Learner and Dedicated Educator

My journey in education began with a deep fascination for the natural world. I pursued a B.Sc. with Zoology Honours, delving into the intricacies of animal life. My curiosity then led me to specialize in Cytogenetic through a M.Sc. in Zoology. Driven by a passion to ignite young minds, I embarked on a teaching career. My initial 3 years were spent nurturing students at the higher secondary school level. This experience laid a strong foundation for my foray into college teaching. For 3 fulfilling years, I donned the role of a part-time lecturer. For the past 14 years, I have thrived as a full-time faculty member in the college. Throughout this enriching journey, I have continuously strived to refine my craft. My thirst for knowledge led me to pursue a B.Ed. degree, equipping me with the pedagogical skills to create effective learning environments. Further expanding my horizons, I completed an M.Phil. in Environmental Science, recognizing the crucial role of environmental awareness in shaping future generations.

Beyond the Classroom

My belief in lifelong learning extends beyond the classroom walls. I am a tech-savvy individual, constantly exploring new ways to integrate technology into my teaching methods. I actively experiment with innovative approaches to make learning engaging and impactful. My commitment to student well-being is unwavering. I am certified in First Aid by the Red Cross Society of India, prepared to handle any emergency situation. Additionally, I find immense satisfaction in giving back to society. As a life member of St. John's Ambulance, I actively participate in social work initiatives.

A Lifelong Pursuit

My journey as an educator is a continuous pursuit of learning and growth. I have authored 3 research papers, contributing to the advancement of knowledge in my field. To stay abreast of the latest developments, I have actively participated in over 10 seminars and conference

A Well-Rounded Individual

When I'm not engrossed in the world of education, you might find me scaling new heights with rock climbing or exploring new trails while trekking. I am an avid traveler, always seeking new experiences and cultures. To unwind, I enjoy biking amidst nature and nurturing my love for gardening.

A Guiding Light for Students

At the heart of my endeavors lies a core objective: to be a good human being and inspire my students to do the same. My purpose is to empower them with knowledge, critical thinking skills, and a love for learning. I strive to motivate them to build a bright future for themselves and contribute meaningfully to society.
